PEOPLE in the big cities are very good judges of values. Ninety per cent of them wear clothes made to their individual measure

In London, Paris and Berlin, even the cheapest paid clerk has his clothes made to measure

There is only one clothing store of any consequence on State Street in Chicago, and that wouldn't be there if it depended upon the city trade

Good dressers nowadays, have their clothes made for them. In so doing they do not have to confine their choice of cloth to a few patterns; neither do they have to wear a style of garment that may not exactly please them, in order to get a fit

Think it over, and then come in and see us

Yours truly

Rice and Arnold
